We are each on our own developmental continuum and therefore have our own developmental needs. Parents know that first hand: just because your toddler turned twelve months doesn't mean she is starting to walk. In the same way that not all toddlers start to walk on the same day, not all readers are on the same reading level when they enter my class. In fact, in the average American classroom, there is a span of usually six years in reading development. I want to help my students become stronger, more confident readers. One way to do that is by setting up a guided reading program. In guided reading, I will group my students by ability. Then, I will work with each group separately in order to meet that group's needs. Each group will be reading different texts. That's where we need your help. We would love the supplies to make that dream a reality.

To set up the best guided reading program in my class, I am requesting

- Guided Reading Text Types (levels ___ - ___) authored by Fountas & Pinnell
- Guided Reading book baskets
- A subscription to Reading A-Z
